Workers' Compensation Commission's Authority to Review Court of Existing Claims Decisions

Labor & Employment Practice Group

May 1, 2014

On April 17, 2014, in Carlock v. Workers' Compensation Commission, ¹ the Oklahoma Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Commission (Commission) cannot review an order of award made by the Court of Existing Claims for an injury occurring prior to February 1, 2014, despite provisions in 85A O.S. § 400(I) and (J), which provides for the Commission's authority to review such matters.

In Carlock, the Court specifically addressed whether the Commission has jurisdiction to review orders and awards made by the Court of Existing Claims for injuries occurring prior to February 1, 2014, pursuant to 85A O.S. § 400(A).² The Court concluded that "[a]II aspects of the adjudication of claims for injuries occurring prior to February 1, 2014, are governed by the law in effect at the time of the injury,³ including the rights of the parties to seek review of an order or award (1) before a three-judge panel of the Court of Existing Claims, as successor to the Workers' Compensation Court,⁴ or (2) before the Supreme Court, either directly from an order or award of a trial judge, or after review by a three-judge panel."^{5,6} In support of its holding, the Court stated, "[b]ecause the Workers' Compensation Commission had no jurisdiction to review orders or awards prior to February 1, 2014, that tribunal cannot review an order or award made by the Court of Existing Claims for an injury occurring prior to February 1, 2014."
